- The bid will be submitted by the 20 June 2014, with a final approval decision made in September 2014, if successful the delivery of the project will commence from November 2014 to November 2018 with a possible launch event on 11 November 2014 at the Senedd.

- The project seeks partnerships with local history, peace groups and universities, as these partners can assist with the collection and communication work. People’s Collection Wales will hopefully deliver digitalisation training to the local communities.

- This was covered in point 4, ‘Update from Members’, by [Welsh Government Official 2].

6. Collaborative working

- Digital resources were identified as a key element during the creation of Cymru’n Cofio Wales Remembers 1914-1918 Programme including a digital legacy.
- The Programme website is the central hub with social media (Twitter & Facebook), supporting and directing traffic to it. There are two twitter accounts, English and Welsh, with a bilingual Facebook page.
- Twitter has been successful and took off quickly, with it piggybacking on other successful feeds, such as the First Minister’s feed, each retweet attracted new followers. Twitter has proven itself to be an effective platform to answer questions and to speak to partners/customers.

- Facebook development has been slower, with an limited number of ‘likes’, but pace has quickened, £80 was spent on advertising to promote the page over a two week window, the page currently has over 280 ‘likes’.
- [Welsh Government Official 2] emphasised that, they are happy to promote any events or news items.

b. Discussion in small groups
- Members broke into small groups and discussed social media, either how their organisations already use it and what issues have been encountered.
