1. Background

1.1 The National Survey for Wales is a continuous survey with a randomly-selected sample of over 11,000 respondents aged 16 and over across Wales each year. The survey is conducted via face-to-face interviews and covers a wide range of topics including public services, local area and safety, leisure time activities, population health and wellbeing. To ensure the survey continues to meet the needs of survey users, topics are reviewed each year.

1.2 In this research project, a range of new questions developed for the National Survey for 2019-20 were cognitively tested. It is vital to use pre-testing methods, such as cognitive testing, to assess survey questions and to ensure that the questions and response options are clear, comprehensible and understood in a consistent manner by respondents with diverse characteristics, and that respondents are willing and able to answer the questions. This therefore helps to ensure that the survey questions are reliable, valid, unbiased and sensitive.

2. Methodology

Desk review

2.1 To evaluate the new questions developed for the National Survey for 2019-20, NatCen Social Research was commissioned by Welsh Government to carry out a desk review and two rounds of cognitive testing interviews. The desk review of potential new questions was carried out by researchers in NatCen's Questionnaire Development and Testing Hub, who are experts in questionnaire design and cognitive interviewing. For this review, a revised version of the Questionnaire Appraisal System (QAS-99) was used. The QAS-99 is a checklist which can be used to systematically review survey questions for problems in the wording or structure of the questions and response options. Two NatCen researchers reviewed the new questions independently, looking at the instructions, wording, layout, routing and respondent burden.

2.2 Based on this review, recommendations were made on potentially problematic questions to prioritise for testing. A final list of questions for cognitive testing was agreed with the Welsh Government.

Cognitive testing

2.3   In total, twenty face-to-face cognitive interviews were carried out across two rounds of hall testing in Cardiff and Wrexham. The first round of testing aimed to identify any problems with the questions through exploring the respondents' understanding and comprehension of the questions and response options. The second round of testing aimed to test additional questions which were not included in the first round, and to retest changes made to questions which were found to be problematic in the first round of cognitive testing. Respondents were recruited by a specialist recruitment agency using specifically designed quotas to ensure that all the selected survey questions were tested with at least two or three respondents.

2.4   The topics covered by the questions varied. The first round of testing was completed with ten participants and included questions on:

- Dental health

- Public opinion on parenting approaches

- Transport behaviours and attitudes

- Access to health information, advice and support

- Skills development in the workplace

- Ageism in the workplace

- Retirement

- Fair work

- Medicine and side effects.

3.   Key findings

Round one

3.1   Overall, the cognitive testing findings showed that the selected questions worked well. For a number of the questions, respondents were able to comprehend them and provide an answer without any difficulty. It was therefore recommended that these questions remain unchanged. The questions on access to health information and medicine and side effects, for example, generally worked well, thus no amendments were suggested. These questions were not recommended for retesting in the second round.

3.2 Problems were identified with some questions in the first round of testing, which related primarily to comprehension of specific terms, relevance of timeframes for some questions, applicability of certain questions to specific groups of participants (for example, the dental health questions to people who wear dentures), appropriateness of mode of administration (self-completion versus interviewer-administered questions for the section on public opinion on parenting approaches).

3.3 For these questions deemed to be problematic, changes and improvements were recommended, based on the cognitive testing findings. It was suggested that the wording of some questions change slightly; that response options be added, removed or amended; or that examples be given where respondents were unsure about what to consider when answering.

3.4 Certain questions that were revised in light of the findings from the first round of cognitive testing were recommended for testing in the second round. These included questions on opinions on parenting approaches, dental health (testing the questions specifically with people who wear dentures), skills development in the workplace, transport behaviours and attitudes, and retirement.

3.5 In the second round of cognitive testing, these revised questions from the first round were included, along with additional questions which had not been tested in the first round. The second round included questions on the following topics:

- Access to health information, advice and support

- Health and care online

- Dental health

- Public opinion on parenting approaches

- Transport behaviours and attitudes

- Fair work

- Skills development in the workplace

- Ageism in the workplace

- Retirement

- Type of employment

- Welsh language use.

Round two

3.6　The second round of testing showed that most of the questions that were retested after being revised in light of findings from the first round were well understood by the respondents. The clarifications and changes that were implemented between rounds aided in improving participants' understanding of these survey questions.

3.7　In the second round of testing, problems were identified with some of the additional survey questions tested, which were similar to the problems described above for the first round of testing. The recommendations based on the findings included adding explanatory notes to some of the survey questions to help clarify the meaning of certain terms; adding or removing response options; providing examples; and tweaking the wording for questions, to ensure that they are clearer and more comprehensible to all participants.

3.8　The path that each of the tested survey questions took through the project is shown in Annex A. The table highlights the iterative process that each survey question went through during this project. It specifies the original questions proposed by the Welsh Government. Following the desk review, some of the questions underwent changes, which were then tested in the first round of cognitive interviews. As discussed above, the questions then were assessed in light of the findings from the cognitive interviews. Again, some of the questions were slightly changed for the last round of interviews. The final column in the table shows the final version of the questions proposed to the Welsh Government.
